Acknowledgments

Many people influenced and supported the writing of the second edition of Coaching Conversations: Transforming Your School One Conversation at a Time. We especially want to thank our husbands for supporting our work. They were encouraging not only as we wrote and revised this book, but also when we had long days and travel in taking our work to others in the field. We spent many hours sequestered in our offices with our noses in our computers and they still continued to cheer us along!

To our editors and guides at Corwin, Arnis Burvikovs, Desirée Bartlett, Eliza Riegert, and Amy Schroller. Thank you for producing, encouraging, and giving us the push to keep this work fresh and real for new readers.

We want to extend sincere appreciation to Simon T. Bailey for writing our Foreword and being a brilliant champion of our work. He always encouraged us to envision more impact and broader audiences.

Thank you to Denise Milligan, Gennia Holder, and Melissa Spencer for being our well-organized back-office team. Denise kept us organized and moving forward, Gennia ensured we were visible on social media, and Melissa created and edited resources to use in our workshops.

We want to acknowledge and thank our coaching clients who have not only provided examples for this book but also contributed to our personal growth and knowledge by teaching us effective ways to support people to lead major change initiatives within their schools and their lives.

And finally, we offer our sincere appreciation to our friends and colleagues who have supported and encouraged our efforts, especially Diana Williams, Essie Richardson, Reba Schumacher, and Edna Harris. Their support and friendship continue to fuel our passion and commitment to this work.

About the Authors

Linda M. Gross Cheliotas, EdD, has more than 40 years of successful educational experience, including 14 years as a school administrator. As principal, she transformed her underperforming school to a National Blue Ribbon School of Excellence. Dr. Gross Cheliotas was named a National Distinguished Principal in 2002 and holds a doctorate in Organizational Leadership.

For more than ten years, Dr. Gross Cheliotas has been a coach and trainer. She was a founding member and coach for the National Association of Elementary School Principals (NAESP) principal mentor certification program. Dr. Gross Cheliotas currently works with the New York City Council of School Supervisors and Administrators' Executive Leadership Institute, providing professional learning for assistant principals who aspire to become principals. She has presented numerous professional learning programs at the national, state, and local levels.

Dr. Gross Cheliotas is a member of the International Coach Federation from which she has earned the Associate Certified Coach (ACC) credential. She is also a member of NAESP and ASCD.

Linda and her husband have a combined total of five children and four amazing grandchildren. She thoroughly enjoys traveling around the world, reading mystery books, and engaging with her grandkids.

Marceta F. Reilly, PhD, PCC, is a thought leader and passionate advocate for creating schools and systems in which everybody—students, staff, parents, community—thrives. She spent 34 years of her career in public education as a teacher, principal, and finally superintendent of schools. She was constantly experimenting with ways to teach and lead that make schools the trusted center (the heart!) of a community. Now she spends her time as an author, speaker, and leadership coach for educators across the United States. Marceta and her husband have two daughters and six brilliant grandchildren. She loves traveling, wine tasting, and keeping up with the grandkids as their lives unfold.
