

January 30

The Last Clip

(Cool Like Indians POW!)

He's the Clipasaur's greatest ancestor. He's billions of years old. There ^(in the past) used to be Clips everywhere, but now there aren't. Uh . . . they're dead. And there's only one left. His name is—you don't even know—he's so cool and wise.

February 2

Now, he ^(in the past) used to be sad that he was the last Clip, but not anymore. He hid himself in a deep cave and meditated for billions of years. While he meditated he learned. He ^(in the past) used to learn very slowly but now very quickly. And he knows that he's the last ever Clip hiding in his cave. He wakes up and there he is, hibernating, the last Clip. He ^(in the past) used to run wild, but now the Clipasaur is on his trail. Clips are the biggest species of Clipasaur there are. The last Clip was about four times the size of the evil Clipasaur.

February 3

But there were thousands of evil Clipasaur and only one of him. He knew it'd be nearly impossible to defeat them, but he knew he had to try. And so he went to the evil Clipasaur's lair and simply knocked down the door. The Clipasaur said, "Hey, come on in! We're having a party!"

February 6

The Clip walks in and screams, "Your party's over!" (Cheesiest thing ever!)

Ya know what? I don't feel like writing a story today.

—William Kavy
Grade 6