

October 10

Memories (are lost)

Imagine you woke up in a hospital, with no recollection of anything, the only thing you know is that you're doomed. On a hospital bed you get up, go in the hallway and you see flashing lights, papers scattered, doors closed or wide open, everything that gives you the chills, but it seems familiar.

 You decide to walk around, same as before, but then you find something, something that might give you some answers, maybe. It's a door glowing with sunlight down the hall. This is not concerning for some reason. Closer and closer you approach. You here?

These might be answered by a single door hinge. Finally you're there. Ten feet away, your steps start to turn to baby steps and they echo the normal steps. You take a breath . . .

To be continued on October 12.

Evan Katzman
Grade 6