

November 13

That night we went to Medieval Times. It was beyond cool!

(runs where? there) (runs when? early)

We got there early to look at the exhibits they had. It was really funny to hear the (runs how? loud)

(runs how? basically) people talk so loud and in the old timey English. They basically screamed every word! We looked around, bought some things. I bought Phil and Jake gifts for Chanukah. I really should've got them both wooden swords and let them have fun but my mom didn't think it was a good idea. We got my grandma a necklace that's a heart with a ruby in it. I want to write a poem with it, which I might do after I finish telling about the rest of my time there . . .

A little while after we got there, we bought these non-alcoholic piña coladas.

(runs how? actually)

They were actually good. We walked around drinking them and saw the prettiest

(runs when? mostly) horses. There were some brown but mostly white. They were just BEAUTIFUL!

They looked as if they were glowing!! By the way, the whole time we were wearing yellow and red crowns.

A little while later, we were called by crown color to our seats. Our place was first row in the center. They were AMAZING seats! You could see everything.

Our waitress was amazing. She was so funny! To start off she asked what we wanted to drink.

They started the show with introducing the “king” and “princess.” They gave us soup with bread. It was some tomato bisque thing. I dipped my bread in it and it was actually really good. I forgot to mention, there was no silverware for the whole meal! Super fun!!

The show continued and they served this HUGE piece of chicken! It was the thigh and breast, and it was really good!
