

April 10

Dear Tim,

Please return the book on theft and robbery that you took from me when you came over.

—An angered friend,

John

Dear John,

Your book on ungratitude was terrible; because I suffered the entire book, I will keep the books (indirect object)
you lent me.

—A friend with indignation,

Tim

Dear Tim,

(indirect object)
I never lent you those books. You took them. Return them right now. You're interrupting my reading (indirect object)
of A Book About Lying. Don't tell me it's not true.

—A person questioning your friendship,

John

Listen to me, John,

(indirect object)
You anger me like never before. It is extremely rude to send me a book titled How to Eliminate (indirect object)
Anger. Besides, I read the first chapter and it is not helping. Send me something better.

—Your enemy,

Tim

—Michael Squire
Grade 8