

Acknowledgments

As I look at this book, I can't help but feel that dozens, if not hundreds, of names should be written on the cover alongside mine. This is because everything inside that cover comes from the numerous ghostwriters who have inspired, informed, critiqued, and cultivated my teaching and writing over the last 15 years.

While I am supposedly a writer, I know that my words will fail me when it comes to properly thanking them all for everything they've given to me. Even still, I would like to give it a shot.

First, thank you to all my students. While I am technically your teacher, no better teacher exists than you all. You uplift, challenge, affirm, and change me for the better every day.

Thank you as well to the best English department anywhere: Ken, Judith, Tracy, and Robert. I am amazed and informed by the teaching magic that floats out of your rooms on a daily basis.

To other incredible writing teachers I've worked with—David, Kelly, Gretchen, Aletia, Meghan, Amy, Jenna, Heidi, Gail, Eachan, Emily, Celinda, and many others—getting to learn from and observe you is why I am the teacher I am today.

Also, I want to give a sincere thanks to all those administrators who have supported my growth as a teacher, especially Marci, Rebecca, Karen, Ann, Gary, Peter, Carmie, and Debbie.

Big bear hugs to the three editors who've taken a chance on me: Tom Koerner, Lisa Luedeke, and especially Tori Bachman, who crafted this book alongside me.

I also want to acknowledge all those brilliant educators who graciously shared their ideas with the world so that I could borrow and build on them here. A particular thanks to Kelly Gallagher, Tom Newkirk, Alison Marchetti, Rebekah O'Dell, Nancy Frey and Douglas Fisher, Carol Jago, Linda Rief, Nancy Steinke, Patty McGee, Barry Gilmore, Jeff Anderson, and Jim Burke.

To Linda Christensen, who opened her classroom and her heart up to me; Dave Stuart Jr., who spent an entire afternoon helping a teacher from downstate whom he didn't even know find his voice; and Ken McGraw, who was the best mentor and friend any young teacher could dream of—I know this book wouldn’t exist without you.

Thank you as well to my family and friends for the support you gave me through the twists and turns of writing a book, my dad for teaching me to love words, my mom for showing me how to teach from my heart, my brother for always being there for me, and the whole McGarry clan.

To my children Maya and Wesley, it is no coincidence that I embarked on this book after you entered my life. I am inspired by you every day.

The biggest of all thank-yous to the best partner, friend, muse, and editor I have ever known—Cat, I am thankful every hour of every day that I turned right instead of left when leaving my house that day nearly 15 years ago. This book is for and because of you most of all.

Thank you as well to all my readers. Your time is your most valuable asset, and I am so thankful that you entrusted some with me.

And finally, to every teacher out there building, supporting, inspiring, and cultivating his or her students. Your work happens quietly and often without fanfare, but never forget that you change the world every single day. This book is for you.

Publisher’s Acknowledgments

Barry Gilmore
Principal
Hutchison School
Memphis, TN

Jennifer Wheat Townsend
Director of Learning
Noblesville Schools
Noblesville, IN

Andy Schoenborn
ELA and Literacy Teacher
Mount Pleasant High School
Mount Pleasant, MI